Introduction

This bibliography is intended to provide a comprehensive list of publications by Canadian scholars (including international graduate students studying at Canadian institutions) on topics related to Arctic sovereignty, security, and circumpolar governance from 2005-2021. The primary purpose is to compile an up-to-date research tool for students and scholars working on related topics. We hope that it will assist researchers with the compilation of bibliographies for publications and grant applications, as well as encouraging and facilitating better citation practices by scholars who should be aware of and referencing Canadian scholarship (but often are not).

This bibliography lists monographs, edited collections, articles, book chapters, reports, and dissertations or theses written by Canadians at Canadian universities and at Canadian Forces College.

For the purposes of this bibliography, “Arctic” refers to the Arctic Council’s Arctic Human Development Report definition for the Circumpolar Arctic, and in the Canadian context refers to the Arctic and Northern Policy Framework definition of Inuit Nunangat (the Inuit homeland in Canada) and parts of the provincial norths.

I have adopted broad and often flexible definitions of sovereignty, security, and governance. While the bibliography contains various publications related to public safety (broadly defined as safeguarding the general public) with respect to national security, border strategies, emergency management, and other safety and security initiatives, it does not include policing, health emergencies, or firefighting. Furthermore, while various publications herein relate to human security (generally defined in Canada as freedom from pervasive threats to people's rights, safety, or lives), I have adopted a relatively narrow and selective definition that still encourages a deepening of the conventional state-centric vision of security to one that places security of people at the core. The section on food security in this volume does not represent a complete list and is intended to serve as an access point to the extensive literature on this subject. Publications on climate security are distributed across various chapters. I have not included sections on health security, educational security, cultural security, or linguistic security.

To produce this volume, I have conducted a comprehensive survey of online search engines (such as Google Scholar), various journal and library databases, the curricula vitae of scholars, and university department websites. Readers are encouraged to bring any omissions to my attention, and I will gladly incorporate additional references in future versions of this bibliography.

I would like to thank Jill Barclay, Nicole Covey (chapter 15), Dr. Ryan Dean (chapter 3), and Corah Hodgson for their assistance in the compilation and copyediting of parts of this bibliography. This publication was possible owing to the financial support of the Department of National Defence Mobilizing Insights in Defence and Security (MINDS) program, Canada Research Chair program, and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada.
